PROSPERITAS VESTRA FINIS NOSTRA!

The main challenges, faced by the international departments of the European universities during the COVID-19 pandemic, result from the need for fast adaptation, entirely online interaction with national and international partners, the huge amount of work, the every week changing guidelines and information about the procedures for acting under the unknown circumstances.

During the coronavirus crisis the university international departments adopted a key role of communication centres with the world outside and turned into hubs for information exchange.

PROSPERITAS VESTRA FINIS NOSTRA!

Main accents of international communication in times of COVID-19:

- information about the current conditions in the countries, from which the international partners come, about the stage and the course of the disease, the changes in the training process and the state of the mobility;
- contact with the universities with which activities are planned in the framework of bilateral agreements for academic cooperation and “Erasmus+” programme;
- participation in online international events;
- training and exchange of good practices for university partnerships and mobility management.

PROSPERITAS VESTRA FINIS NOSTRA!

The team of the International Relations Department participated in over 50 online trainings, virtual meetings and conferences, organized by partner organisations, whose member Varna Medical University is, including:

European University Association;

Black Sea Universities Network,

European Health Management Association

World Health Organization, etc.
